

To the Concerning Commission,

I am a Sorenson and I2eye by Hands On user. Whilst I read/watched both sites (www.c-s-d.com and www.sorenson.com.) I must share my thoughts and express my opinion recent upheaval news about the videophone technology. I strongly believe all of videophone should be interact with all available with other videophone technologies. I think its same principal as utilities rules. I don't see three cable companies installing three wiring around my place. I don't see three sewer companies installing three sewers underground nearby my place. I don't see three telephone companies installing three wiring around here. Therefore, Sorenson ought/must surrender the right and interact with other companies. However, Sorenson's model (VP-100) and they provide d-link separately is a big help for our community, as the other provider should have able to get the same device from Sorenson without competing against each other. Videophone features are allowed to differ from other companies, as I wouldn't mind. As the service doesn't cost Deaf/hard of hearing folks so therefore shouldn't compete against each other. In addition, for the future, I would like to seek video phone device includes Video Relay Service installed on each any kind of video phone devices without ordering special device to put one booth for Deaf/hard of hearing. I added because I disliked the idea when I am at the public places and I had to walk the longest distance or looking for the special device booth (TTD). I hope this would keep you in mind for the future by any means all of the device are ready made for deaf/hard of hearing. So that I wouldn't have to walk to look for the Video Relay Service - Video Phone in public places in the future. Other thing I wanted to give the last scenario with an example when I am at my hearing friend and they have videophone. Suddenly, I need to make a call with Video Relay Service and their device doesn't include Video Relay Service. As I hope I would not even experience that in the future.

Video Phone user,
Jeb Baldrige